Strategy, Leadership and Resource Management in Family Business

Term 8

Faculty: Professor K Ramachandran, Indian School of Business

Why this course:

Family businesses are unique in many ways, particularly in Asian countries. Their uniqueness arises primarily out of the dynamic overlap in roles of ownership, management and family responsibilities concentrated in some but not all the key people (see diagram below). For successful management of family businesses, it is important to understand this dynamics and respond to them constructively. This does not happen automatically. Among the several areas that require attention, two key areas of challenge in family businesses are professionalization of business, and developing and practicing family governance that includes succession, retirement, ownership and wealth management. How does one do it? Not easy? Consequently, break up of family businesses is often considered normal. Only a small percentage of family businesses survive and grow beyond second and third generations.

However, there is new global evidence available now that with appropriate strategy, leadership and governance mechanisms and timely action, both families and their businesses can be preserved and prospered. Several family businesses in India have demonstrated how they are able to achieve perpetuation of both family and business, but there are many who are groping for direction. The current level of interest, inquisitiveness and excitement in India in Family Business is a reflection of the above. There is also growing evidence that nurturing entrepreneurship is critical to build lasting family business. Managing family businesses successfully across generations is one of the ultimate challenges for any manager, whether belonging to family or not. In essence, family businesses want to tap the emerging entrepreneurial opportunities while keeping harmony at home.
Managers at middle and senior levels working for family businesses often fail for want of an understanding of the complex dynamics of the challenges of managing them. Some of them are easy to work with at some levels of hierarchy, while some others are not. It is important for managers to be knowledgeable and sensitive about the family business challenges to be successful in building their careers.

This course focuses on the essentials to build lasting family businesses. No course such as this is offered anywhere in India and most schools outside. Drawing key concepts and tools of analysis from Strategy, Leadership, Entrepreneurship and Wealth Management literature, this course offers a unique opportunity to apply them in the context of family business. The course is highly application oriented and will build on the experiences of a number of families, mostly Indian. It heavily draws on my own consulting and research insights will be shared throughout the course.

The course will facilitate significant level of experience sharing and development of insight to match individual requirements.

This course will be found of immense value by students belonging to business families, and those likely to work with them as consultants or managers, since they directly or indirectly interact with family businesses constantly.
